

The energy in an isolated system remains
either be created nor destroyed.

Engineers like to solve problems. If there are no problems handily available they will create their own.